

1.7 Reflection: Your Diagnostic Commitment

Answer each question in one or two sentences. Write your answers somewhere you will see them before your next writing session.

1. When I read AI-generated dialogue that sounds flat, my very first action from now on will be:

[YOUR_ANSWER — e.g., "Run the five-dimensional scan before I touch the delete key."]

2. The dimension my AI tool flattens most aggressively is:

[YOUR_ANSWER_FROM_THE_AUDIT — e.g., "Sentence-Length Variance. Everything comes out the same length."]

3. The old habit I am leaving behind, starting today, is:

[YOUR_ANSWER_FROM_THE_AUTOPSY — e.g., "Typing 'make him grumpier' and hoping for the best."]

Final Confirmation: Read your three answers aloud. You now have a clear map for finding problems, a concrete standard for your voice, a case backed by evidence against your old habits, and a corrected prompt template. The five channels are visible, and the mixing board is in your hands. When you next sit down to generate dialogue, your eyes will scan the dimensions before frustration reaches for the delete key. That change in how you work will stay with you.
